CELEBRATE AMERICAN WOMEN'S HISTORY MONTH, MARCH, 2014,

Book IV in the Multi-Award-Winning Series, Remembrance of Things that Never Happened

GONE-AWAY MARY.

If we could trace the two Marys down through the ages of American History, what causes would they have espoused? What words spoken? What deeds accomplished? What fables told? Rubythroat Press historical novels suggest answers to these questions.

The Novel: In the midst of the Great American Awakening, 1730, Mary — shaman, prophetess, and seer — experiences a vision of Mary Magdalene. While dedicated to the welfare of the escaped Boston Almshouse residents and the Wampanoag Indians who shelter them, Mary acquiesces to the missions that the Magdalene assigns her and is gone into the future periodically — hence her Indian sobriquet, “Gone-Away Mary.” She leaves behind the love-besotted Sophie to midwife her rival’s severely defective baby as well as to search for the runaway six-year-old Lucy, who is hiding in a thunderbird’s aerie. Mary assists in the transformation of the New Orleans Ursuline Convent, as well as the Williamsburg, Virginia, Public Hospital for the Insane. Finally she distributes “Mary Messages” throughout the country for others to follow in the new century.

Sequel to: The Cave of Storms, Daughter of the Morning Star and An American Children's Crusade

The Author: Patricia Weenolsen, Ph.D., a psychologist, is the author of TRANSCENDENCE OF LOSS OVER THE LIFE SPAN and THE ART OF DYING, widely reviewed by Publishers Weekly, Library Journal, Tacoma News Tribune, Newark Star-Ledger, and others. She has also published short fiction in TriQuarterly, Southern Humanities Review, Confrontation, Buffalo Spree and many other magazines under the name Patricia Otway-Ward. She has appeared on The Today Show, the Joan Rivers Show, and National Public Radio.
